Despite the recognition that persistent pain can occur following aneurysmal subarachnoid hemorrhage (SAH) patients, little has been reported in the literature regarding the characteristics of persistent pain in the period following SAH. Our aim was to investigate the characteristics of persistent pain following aneurysmal SAH. Subjects were enrolled prospectively if they underwent a follow-up visit at least 1 month after the initial SAH (n=131). Data on demographic, pre-existing medical history, and pain status during the initial presentation were collected and analyzed. The visual analog scale (VAS) was used to assess current pain status. The distribution of the pain scores was compared between SAH patients who were pain free, improved, and worsened after a month (n=82). Results were compared to a group of matched healthy controls (n=25). The mean age of the subjects was 57.6 years. There were no statistically significant differences in age, gender, and comorbidities. The majority of subjects were treated with anticonvulsants for a mean duration of 23.8 weeks. The incidence of persistent pain was 49.2%. There were no statistically significant differences in VAS scores between the SAH patients who were pain free, improved, and worsened at a month. However, a statistically significant difference in the VAS scores was observed between the SAH patients and the matched healthy controls. The majority of SAH patients experienced persistent pain at a mean of 7.1 months after SAH. However, there was no significant difference in the VAS scores between the SAH patients and the matched healthy controls. Thus, the findings of this study suggest that pain should not be regarded as normal following aneurysmal SAH.// (C) Copyright 2009-2011 Frederic Bron. // // Use, modification and distribution are subject to the Boost Software
