Read MoreMaryland star point guard Anthony Cowan will miss the entire 2013-14 season after surgery for a torn ACL, according to an official announcement. Cowan tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee in practice last week, and will have surgery next week to repair the injury. Cowan is averaging 13.9 points, 2.7 assists and 2.0 rebounds per game for the Terrapins. "It's really unfortunate for him, but we know that he's a great kid," head coach Mark Turgeon said in a release. "He was very resilient this past year, and we think that he's going to be a great kid moving forward and coming back and being successful when he's done with basketball. He's going to be a wonderful representative of Maryland basketball and our community in a lot of different ways." The news comes after a season-long battle with an illness that forced Cowan to miss several games and portions of others. The disease was first diagnosed in 2012, and he missed seven games that year and one this year. "There's no doubt that he's one of the finest kids that I've been associated with and I've been associated with some good ones," Turgeon said. "He's an all-around kid, and he's going to be terrific and he's going to be a really good person for our university. He's going to be a leader, and I know our basketball team is going to benefit from it." Cowan is the second player to miss the entire season after undergoing knee surgery. That was Maryland guard Troy Johnson in 2011-12.[Principles of conservative and operative treatment of non-union of the femoral shaft fractures]. This study presents conservative and operative treatment of non-union of the femoral shaft fracture. 40 patients (25 men, 15 women) were treated with conservative or operative technique. The average age was 39.3 years (15 to 72 years). In the group of conservatively treated patients the non-union was in 29 patients after operation, without initial fracture
