The role of bilirubin in the development of Alzheimer's disease (AD) is unknown. Thus, we investigated the association between plasma total bilirubin (TB) levels and the incidence of AD in community-dwelling older adults. A prospective cohort study was conducted using baseline data from participants in the Singapore Longitudinal Aging Study. The incidence of AD was determined by annual telephone interviews using the CERAD Assessment of AD and CERAD Neuropsychological Screening Battery. Plasma TB levels were measured by a colorimetric method. We examined the association between baseline plasma TB levels and AD incidence using multivariable logistic regression adjusted for age, gender, education, total cholesterol, triglycerides, diabetes, hypertension, and smoking status. The study population consisted of 471 participants with a median age of 80 years. After a median follow-up of 3.8 years, 22 participants developed AD. The adjusted ORs of AD for increasing TB levels were 0.82 (95% CI 0.74-0.93, P = 0.002) for the 2nd tertile, and 0.73 (95% CI 0.62-0.85, P Possibility of utilizing a naphthalene derivative-based multicenter capillary electrophoresis/LIF system for the measurement of ionized inorganic cations and anions in proteins.
