I have a dataframe with two columns which represents products and quantities. I want to get a dataframe that has an id and it's product and quantity. Something like this: dataframe with ids [(id1, product1, qty1), (id2, product2, qty2), (id3, product3, qty3)] And I need something like this: [id, product, qty] [id1, product1, qty1] [id2, product2, qty2] [id3, product3, qty3] I was able to do this with pandas' merge but I got the same dataframe as before. I tried using df = df.set_index(['product', 'id']) but I get errors because there are multiple combinations of product and id. A: You can use str.join to join with the product column with a space, add a comma and then split again on comma, and then reshape: df.set_index('product').join(' ').str.split(' ').str[1] Output: 0 id1 1 id2 2 id3 Name: product, dtype: object This can then be used in a list comprehension like: [['id','product','qty'][i] for i in df.set_index('product').join(' ').str.split(' ').str[1]] ['id1', 'product1', 'qty1', 'id2', 'product2', 'qty2', 'id3', 'product3', 'qty3'] Patient-controlled analgesia: how does it work? Many patients receiving intravenous sedation and regional anaesthesia will experience post-operative pain, and will desire appropriate analgesia for this. This will be available in many forms but the most popular one is patient-controlled analgesia (PCA), which is the delivery
