A: Open-source alternatives are available for Windows, Linux, and Mac. I've used all three. JFreeChart: JFreeChart is a Java implementation of OpenOffice/LibreOffice charting. It's powerful, versatile, and free. OpenOffice/LibreOffice: The OpenOffice.org charting suite is free and also available for all three operating systems. It has a couple shortcomings, however: it's no longer actively developed, and it lacks the flexibility of OpenOffice.org. Google Charts: Google provides several charting libraries, including JavaScript, HTML5, WebGL, and Data Visualization API. The JavaScript library is also free. It is, however, only available for the Google Web Interface, Google Chrome

The long term goals of this proposal are to elucidate the molecular mechanisms that lead to B cell tolerance and to identify tolerizing factors that will be useful in the design of safer immunotherapies. Our specific aims are to define the molecular requirements for efficient presentation of antigen by mature resting B cells in order to induce antigen-specific tolerance, and to characterize the tolerizing factor induced by peptide loading of resting B cells that results in diminished T cell activation. For these aims we will use soluble antigen and peptides that induce tolerance. Our first aim is to understand the molecular requirements for tolerance induction in mature resting B cells. In this aim we will use a series of 2-6 amino acid peptides as a tool to identify the amino acids and/or domains of the peptide that are critical for B cell tolerance induction. The second aim is to characterize the tolerizing factor(s) induced by peptide loading of resting B cells. In this aim we will test if the peptide induces tolerance by either the direct mechanism of antigen presentation, or by eliciting a tolerizing factor that will cause antigen-specific B cell death and tolerance.

Agrarian party To The Left of the government Agrarian party To The Left of the government () was a small political party in the Western Sahara. The party was formed in the summer of 2012 following the departure of the United Democratic and Popular Forces alliance from the National Movement for the Liberation of Western Sahara, when UMPWS withdrew from the coalition to support the candidature of Mohamed Abdelaziz. The party was led by Mohamed Said Ould Mohamed Abdelaziz. The party took part in the elections of the Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic on 5 December 2012. The party boycotted the 2016 parliamentary election. It decided to join the national coalition of the Sahrawi Popular Democratic Party.
