Manganese is a well known catalyst used to remove oxides or contaminants from metals. Potassium permanganate is also used in catalytic chemistry and therefore a prospective manufacturing and possible use is studied. The process is investigated and optimized for calcium, cadmium and cuprioxid. The process yield is investigated and kinetic parameters are calculated. Additionally, the effectiveness of potassium permanganate, for the treatment of cadmium oxide, is investigated. The results show that potassium permanganate can be used to remove oxides from the metal with a yield of 1.14 mg Ca<sup>2+</sup> + 1.14 mg Cu<sup>2+</sup> per mg oxide, and is effective in the removal of 48.13 mg Cd<sup>2+</sup> per 50 mg potassium permanganate for cuprioxid.Q: How to achieve simple-recursive-linking in C?
