Member states are sovereign and have their own national interests to pursue. The EU is essentially a political construct which requires solving problems through multilateral and cooperative processes and partnerships. To overcome this inherent difficulty, EU policy makers have identified the process of coordination across member states and across levels of governance as the solution that provides the necessary framework and conditions for policy making. This book examines the history of the coordination process, focusing on the period since the aftermath of the Second World War when the driving force of such coordination was and still is the system of the Concert of Europe. The book traces the history of the coordination process to its present position and examines its evolution in light of political, legal, and institutional dimensions. The book contains valuable chapters on both European and national levels of coordination. About the Author Filippo Segni is a professor of Political Theory at the University of Florence. He has published many books and articles in different fields of political theory and on European and transnational issues.Call for Talks: ECT 2019 The European Commission Communication's impact on payments in the future looks at key aspects of payments in the single market. The Commission has published a detailed study of the European Payments Market (EPM) in the form of a Communication, which further considers the need for new-generation financial infrastructure. Through its contributions to ECT 2019, the FSF welcomes the publication of this Communication. The aim of ECT 2019 is to debate, discuss and respond to this Communication, as well as other important aspects of the EPM. The focus of the ECT 2019 event is on building a strong digital single market, in which payments should benefit all citizens. Payments should empower them and offer them more ways to pay, whether at the tap, tap of their smartphone, or tap of their contactless card. The FSF has already highlighted the benefits of digital payments, and in this ECT 3ef4e8ef8d
