Kaggle.com References Category:GTA IVLung parenchyma destruction in ARDS is not a reactive process: P-cadherin is a marker of lung parenchymal destruction in ARDS. Lung parenchyma destruction in ARDS is considered to be a reactive process resulting from immune and inflammatory reactions. P-cadherin is a recently discovered novel cadherin molecule that is highly expressed in noninflammatory or metastatic tumors. We investigated whether P-cadherin could be a marker of lung parenchyma destruction and lympho-vascular invasion in ARDS. In a prospective autopsy study, we compared P-cadherin immunostaining to in situ hybridization for SP-A and SP-B mRNA in postmortem lung tissues of 20 patients with ARDS and 20 with no lung pathologic changes, 10 patients with COPD and 12 with pneumonia, respectively. P-cadherin was detected at interstitial-alveolar interstitium in 9 of 20 cases of ARDS and was not detected in either pneumonia or COPD groups. In situ hybridization for SP-A and SP-B mRNA was positive in the majority of cases of both ARDS and pneumonia and negative in COPD cases. The proportion of the ARDS cases in which in situ hybridization showed P-cadherin expression was significantly higher than the proportion of controls in which P-cadherin was negative (P = 0.02). Thus, we conclude that lung parenchymal destruction is not a reactive process in ARDS but is related to the presence of P-cadherin.One of the worst days in the history of the Museum For those who don't have Twitter, I have only tweeted this in the last hour. I took photos of the damage on Thanksgiving Day. You will see they are much better than the pictures I took on Wednesday when I first noticed something was amiss. Facebook, I posted most of the photos over there so I'm sure you all have seen them. There were at least three times I felt like putting up a mini-bio of the Museum, but I didn't know whether it would be needed before the middle of the month. I put up a video on Wednesday night about what was happening, and it has gone viral. It has been up a total of 36 times, so it
