For example, say we have a 8-bit char: #include int main() { char c = '1'; printf("c = %c ", c); } Output: c = 1 But how can we visualize the logic behind this? A: Because its byte address is 1,0000000000000001. On an 8 bit system, this is equal to 00000001. The least significant bit is the 8th bit, the most significant is the 7th bit.
