The top crypto by market cap rallied above $8,000 after getting support from bullish technicals. This prompted some coin investors to consider Bitcoin as a digital gold. Others are seeing a chance to get out before the drop. Crypto market cap is currently $170 billion and it has made a big move higher, riding on the back of Bitcoin and Ethereum. At press time, a bull run has seen Bitcoin rise nearly 18% and make a high of over $8,400. Ethereum price is also nearing $300, up over 10%. Analysts believe that both of these cryptocurrencies have been given a lift by investors who are looking for a store of value in uncertain times. "I think that some of the recent support we've seen for Bitcoin is due to people looking to protect some of their capital before the upcoming Cyprus bank crisis," said Mati Greenspan, senior market analyst at eToro. "In a previous week, we saw people 'flipping' their digital currency to fiat, and in the coming week, it could be in preparation for the Cyprus bank crisis." Others are taking advantage of this opportunity to profit from the rally. Some investors are selling into the recent run up, hoping to make
