On copying the data, it fails saying that the "Server has encountered a problem" and tells me to "check the system logs for more details". I'm aware of the admin password, as I need to access the backups to alter them. The windows password is locked, and I'm logged into it at the moment to change the backup file permissions, but it's not the server's OS I'm concerned about locking, just the backups. I've looked at the server logs and I can see it attempting to create the backup file in D:\Backups

SharpAlarm is a clock alarm system that plays your favorite music as an alarm clock. A common one is to use an alarm, which you can activate through your mobile phone, clock, or even computer. As such, SharpAlarm wants to offer a helping hand, or at least to remind you of upcoming events. Set a custom background image A cool thing about it is that there's no setup involved, letting you see what it's all about from the moment download is done. However, a couple more requirements need to be on your computer, such as.NET Framework for basic functionality, as well as Winamp, because it is used as a means of alert playback. Although the visual design is wrapped around a classic window frame, it can be slightly tweaked to make it suit your style. It comes up with a default background picture, but it can be easily changed with an image of your own. There's a clock to show system time, sa well as an intuitive set of controls to help with defining the process. Plays your favorite Winamp tracks as alerts The core function is to help you get up in the morning, but this means you need to leave your computer running at almost all times. However, it can also come in handy for creating quick reminders for upcoming events, even if there's no option to have a custom message show up when the target time is up. Winamp's role in this operation is more or less mandatory. This is because it needs to be active for the alert to be triggered, initiating playback of current items when the time comes. You can choose to set up a snooze timer, or completely disable the alarm after it rings. In conclusion Taking everything into consideration, we can state that SharpAlarm can manage to make you get out of bed in the morning while your favorite song is playing. Unfortunately, it completely depends on other components to be of full use, leaving much to be desired overall, even as a simple alarm clock. SharpAlarm is a service that helps you get up in the morning by playing your favorite music. Download SharpAlarm now and try it out for free! Snapchat is a popular photo-sharing app that allows users to send photos and videos to their friends for a short period of time. The app itself has existed for a few years, but the recently added filter option took it to the next level. Although the app isn't perfect, it definitely has some good qualities. As long as your smartphone or other device is connected to Wi-Fi, you can make the most out of the app. But it's not only limited to sending photos, the app has many other nifty features as well. What is Snapchat? Snapchat is an app for sending photos or video messages that vanish within a few seconds. The idea behind the app is that the receiver of the message will be able to view the image or video only if the recipient views the app. In addition to sending photos or video, Snapchat also enables users to take pictures or record videos. The person sending the image or video can set the type of content that will be delivered. However, even when the content is sent, the recipient is not shown the content. The recipient will only be able to see the information and not the content itself. How does it work? At the time of writing this, the app is only available for iPhone, Android and Windows Phone. To start using the app, users will have to download the app from the iTunes or Google Play Store. The app requires a Wi-Fi connection, which is why it is most convenient to use the app on Wi-Fi. After downloading the app, the users will be required to set up an account. Users will have to select a username, password, email address, and location of where the recipient will receive the message. After setting up the account, users will receive a verification code. The app uses your email address to verify your account and send the verification code. The code will then be used to verify your identity. The verification code will be valid for a short period of time. After the verification code is used, the Snapchat app will be enabled. Once the verification code is used, the user can start creating content by taking pictures or recording videos. Once a message is created, the user will be asked to choose a friend or a public message that will be delivered to all the users. The recipient will then receive a notification on his or her smartphone or computer. The user will have to open the Snapchat app and look for the message that was sent. There will be a small icon of a camera on the top right corner of the app. The user will have to click on the icon to open the app. On opening the app, the user will be shown the content that was sent. Once the content is seen, the app will automatically be closed.
