Enter the Verification ID and click Activate Windows. In the window that opens, you need to enter the account name (as an administrator), as well as specify the username and password that you have already used repeatedly. If you created an account in Windows several years ago, then at the end you need to select "Logout". Next, the confirmation process will begin (including the automatic shutdown of Windows), and then the installation of Windows will begin.Accessing Your Computer During Windows Setup To install Windows, at a minimum, you must agree to all changes to the registry, and also agree that only your accounts will be used to work with this computer. If you need to create a copy of the files on your computer, do it right away. Otherwise, you risk getting access to the system bypassing you. You can do this with the regedit command. It can also be used to recover corrupted files. Here you need to write down the required version of the drivers or update the system. In addition, you will need to specify the turnkey level of protection and choose to install only additional drivers. In this case, choose the one that you need. If you only have drivers for the network card, disable this option. If only the driver for the printer is available, check the box next to this item. On a note. Any other changes will not be recorded in the registry. Once you've completed these steps, you're ready to install Windows. Initially, the installation will take place on the local machine, and then, after rebooting, you will be able to connect to the selected computer. This way you won't have to reinstall everything from scratch. In order to avoid errors in the future, and to solve some problems altogether, many people leave a backup copy of system files on their computer. In the event that a backup is not available, you can reinstall Windows again. This must be done manually. In addition, users complain that they do not understand at all and do not know how to run programs, so they still recommend using the program for this. It also allows you to run many applications. So that you can check how the program works, you will find detailed instructions on the developer's website. Once Windows is installed, you will have access to the main menu. To select a particular program, you do not need to perform any action. Instead, you just need to start typing the name of the program and press enter. In the case when you do not understand what is happening with the computer, you can call up the menu using the keyboard shortcut Ctrl+Alt+Tab. If the computer does not respond, type the keyboard shortcut
