Without a doubt, databases are taking over in terms of importance. It's no longer a question of if you should consider database development, but when, how, what and how much. But it's also not always clear how databases fit into an organization. As you read this list, I encourage you to follow the seventh step — I'm sure it's going to be a little eye-opening. 7 Steps to Building a Successful Database-Driven Business A database is a way of organizing and storing information, and it's a lot like a spreadsheet. Indeed, it's true that data is organized in a spreadsheet as well. Data is not stored as is, rather, it is logically stored. The difference between a spreadsheet and a database is that a database has its own storage methods. A spreadsheet is all about its own storage. My spreadsheets have columns for a spreadsheet and a record. I'm only going to fill in one side of the equation with each record. I'm just pulling the data from whatever is on that side. With a database, I would put the data in my database, then query to get the data I want. Spreadsheets are not secure
