I'm not sure if this is really the way I'm going to do it but I'm not really interested in reinstalling my entire system just because I forgot some damn password or something. If I try to restore a backup of my profile in Windows 7 or 8, it says it is unable to do so because of this error: "The restore failed. There is not a backup for that computer. Please try a different restore location". I'm a bit worried about that because I did some crazy things with my profile like exporting and importing most of the user settings to a new user profile and deleting the old user profile just to try and see if that would fix the problem. It worked and everything was great until I restarted my system and logged back into the new profile. I then tried to import my settings from my backup and then the error occurred. I even tried restoring from another time and day and it worked fine but I lost all my settings (mainly IE settings) so I might as well reinstall the entire thing. Can you tell me what my problem is and how to fix this problem? PS: The password on this account is VERY important and
