The present disclosure relates generally to social networking systems. More particularly, the present disclosure relates to systems and methods for presenting aggregated aspects of a user's social network data to the user. The ability to analyze a user's social network to gain insight regarding the user's social network, such as the number of friends the user has, their activities on a social network, etc., is becoming increasingly popular. Such analysis may include downloading a portion of a user's social network data (e.g., user's profile, social networking activities, etc.) to a client device that is separate from a social networking system. The downloaded social network data may then be analyzed, for example, using an application programming interface (API) provided by the social networking system. One problem with downloading a user's social network data to a client device that
