A bit of a blip on my radar tonight, but the Jumbotron had a bad little glitch that everyone seemed to notice. I thought it was interesting how they decided to acknowledge the problem. At the risk of sounding redundant, I'll just say it again. This was an unprecedented experience. A Jumbotron that is part of the game that isn't showing a picture of one of your players? This is... very strange. And the fact that the Jumbotron's automatic camera was down at the same time it was displaying a "Jumbotron"? Kind of convenient, that. There's two possible explanations for this. The first is that it's a glitch. I do think that it's too convenient for it to be a glitch. The second is that it was a deliberate PR move. Maybe they really were embarrassed about the fan event last week. Maybe they really were doing something and just don't want to say what it is. Who knows? But that little "glitch" had a good effect on the game, didn't it? I mean, you almost had an out by then... A live person in the box. A human being giving you a thumbs up. This is the sort of thing that would make me lose my mind in high school. But as someone who will likely be in the stadium for the Final Four at a few years' time, I'm not going to be feeling all that terrible about this. And maybe they'll have two big Jumbotron-style screens set up for the Final Four. In which case, I guess I'll feel terrible about that.
