Chronic kidney disease in spanish patients with heart failure: prevalence and comorbidity. Chronic kidney disease (CKD) is a frequent finding in patients with heart failure (HF). There are scarce data about the prevalence of CKD in Spain. The present study aimed to estimate the prevalence and comorbidity of CKD in Spanish patients with HF and to identify predictors of CKD in patients in this setting. Consecutive patients with HF were prospectively followed at seven Spanish hospitals and stratified according to presence of CKD and control subjects (2:1) who had HF and no comorbidities with a normal renal function (no-CKD group). Serum creatinine and estimated glomerular filtration rate (eGFR) were used to define CKD. A total of 2,944 patients with HF were included (mean age 81.2 ± 13.8 years; 62.2% female). CKD was present in 11.2% of the patients. Factors associated with CKD were age, female sex, and hypertension. In the no-CKD group, 50.3% had at least one comorbidity, while in the CKD group the percentage was 89.0%. The most common comorbidity in the CKD group was arterial hypertension (54.1%). CKD was associated with worse functional status, higher B-type natriuretic peptide levels and lower haemoglobin. There were no differences in mortality or length of hospital stay between both groups. CKD is a frequent finding in patients with HF and is associated with worse functional and haematological status. Hypertension is the most frequent comorbidity in both groups.
