This course will examine the difference between academic and business ethics. More precisely, it will deal with two different types of ethical rules for use of technology: Academic vs Business Ethics. It will analyze the Ethics of Professional Service Agreements, identifying the purpose and major considerations of the relationship between professional and client. It will assess the issue of Internet Browsing. It will also provide the necessary resources in order to assist participants in understanding the Technology of the Internet. Description: The aim of this course is to provide a holistic understanding of the Internet as a technology and a social phenomenon. The course examines the historical foundations and current state of the Internet, the Internet's relation to other sciences, the relationship between the Internet and our lives, and the role of the Internet in a democracy. This course will also provide the necessary knowledge to create an argument in support of the Internet and/or to develop a critique of it. Thus, if one wishes to be able to use a heterodyne radiation frequency converter to convert the undesirable frequency radiation to an RF signal suitable for efficient transfer to a detector or repeater, the local radiation field at the desired conversion point will be very much less than at the other locations and it will be necessary to use low power so as to avoid dangerous saturation. This need for very low local field radiation is a basic difficulty in heterodyne conversion and the presence of unwanted radio frequency radiation at the radiation frequency is a significant disadvantage. Another and perhaps more serious problem that may be associated with the use of heterodyne conversion to radio frequency conversion is that of the interference problem. Interference problems may be caused by the presence of unwanted RF radiation within the RF band in the region where the heterodyne signal is generated. For example, the mixing process may include a loop-back of the RF band frequency to the RF band frequency within the converter, thus establishing a short loop path for radiation at the RF band frequency. This means that at the location of the generator the radiation from the receiver may be coherent with the desired heterodyne radiation and may cause significant 1d6a3396d6
