* **Lightroom** is a revolutionary new photo management tool. Lightroom allows you to process, organize, and even produce finished images directly from your digital camera. You can automatically organize your photos into folders and subfolders, enable the use of a continuous strip or slide show format to put all the photos in a single folder, and many other useful features. The software is split into the Photo Library/Organizer and Catalog modules, the latter of which actually has nothing to do with catalogs. Instead, it shows you (and others) your photo files in a view mode. You can sort photos by date, size, and subject. The visual editing features of Lightroom are extensive. You can adjust brightness, contrast, saturation, and color balance, apply special effects such as Vignettes, and add frames and text to your images. All photos are automatically "auto-developed," and you can use Lightroom's sophisticated grouping and masking tools to organize and sort your photos, or you can manually crop and enhance each one. * * * **LIGHTROOM** Lightroom is not a standalone program; rather, it is built into Adobe's Creative Suite. To use Lightroom in tandem with Photoshop and most other Creative Suite applications, you need a Creative Suite application to run the Lightroom catalog. While there is no real price difference between the software with and without the catalog, you lose some features without it, including the possibility to print or create other files from your photos, import and export images, and much more. For a one-time fee of $399, you can purchase the Lightroom catalog separately from the software and access all its features. You'll be able to print images, create PDFs, and even generate CD-ROMs, but if you want to use the program's editing features or output to other formats, you'll have to have the software's $750 version to do it. For a discussion of the different versions of Lightroom, see the next chapter. * * * **GIMP**.

GIMP (GNU Image Manipulation Program) is a free open source image editor that supports a number of image formats and offers some of the advanced editing features found in Photoshop. It also features a basic set of layers and editing tools, which is all you need to create simple images. However, as you can see on the next page, things get very complicated when you start on the more complex tasks and edit shapes Animate graphics and apply gradient fills Color correct images Add text Add filters Make a collage Cut, duplicate and paste graphics And more! The first part of this Photoshop Elements tutorial will show you how to modify your PSD template in Photoshop Elements. Before you begin, grab a free PSD template file at Pixlr.com or download the PSD file I'm sharing with you. I'll show you how to modify my PSD file and save it as a new PSD file with a new name. Locate your template file and open it in Photoshop Elements. Click File > New, then click "Open" to import your PSD file into Photoshop Elements. Make sure to select "Create new," rather than "Import." Click OK to import your file. Now that you've imported your file, you can click File > Open to open it in Photoshop Elements. Click Edit > Preferences to open the Preferences dialog box. Make sure the "Open file as PSD" box is checked. When you open the Preferences dialog box, the open file will be set to a document with the extension.psd. Click OK. The next step is to customize your PSD template. Make any changes or simply replace the text in the template with your own text. Click the "Edit" button in the top left of your document. Q: How to get a mongoose count of all fields in JSON I'm using Mongoose with Node.js to process JSON data from an external API, I'm trying to get a count of the fields in this JSON data like shown below. Any ideas how this is possible? { "data": { "name": "joe", "age": 42, "friends": [ { "name": "sam", "age": 13 }, { "name": "kate", "age": 41 } ] } } Note: I understand you can use cursor methods to get counts, but not sure how to get the total of the array field friends. A: You may try using the Object.keys(object) function to get a list of the property names in a node-like object. Then, iterate over the list and set a counter using object.count. You may then use the built-in JSON.stringify() method to convert the count object to a string of JSON format. Then, if you use the built-in function JSON.parse() to build a JSON object from the string, you will have a list of the property names, as well as the count. Primped me up – and it was all for nothin' My friend Rosie has managed to persuade me to 'do' the watercolour painting challenge. It's not at all difficult, and I'm sure I could do it even if I hadn't been the subject of the challenge. But I digress. I've been sitting in a car park at the foot of the Burren for most of
