No more disclaimer/order sound sources & app list patch (v59+): Uses the correct app list structure depending on the type of vehicle configuration (old or new). The application does not update any components, it does not include the car app list. The list of applications for cars can be found in the car's owner's manual and also on the Internet. The app does not update any components due to a bug in the firmware. The sound source list & patch is not reliable. The app currently requires the permission of the device's administrator. This can be disabled if you want the app to work or not. When the app is read-only, it simply disables the device administrator's permission. When the app is running, it may require the device administrator permission to do some things like set permissions. I assume this means that the app doesn't require any device administrator permissions when it's running. But I don't know about that. What permissions does the device administrator app require It depends on the application. Generally, you can choose the type of permission you want, and if you grant it, the app will be allowed to view your phone using that permission. Some apps may have more than one permission. What is a permission? A permission is an app's ability to install and interact with certain system services. These system services are usually accessible to the app through its app interface or web services. Certain permissions are required for these services. A permission allows an application to interact with a specific system service. For more information about these permissions, contact your system administrator or the system manufacturer. Depending on the enterprise security policy, some permissions may not be granted to all interested parties. When you create a permission, you can specify how to access it This table lists the types of permissions available. The method of access may depend on the category. For more information on access, you can refer to the "File and Folder Access" section on the "Gaining Access to Files and Folders" web page (if available) or refer to the documentation that comes with your operating system
