SafeCleaner is a versatile tool that purges numerous Windows programs and files to clean your system of unnecessary files and reduce unwanted space. This adware basically monitors browsing activities and looks for opportunities to take over the users browser and redirect them to various malicious websites. Here's what SafeCleaner does with each redirect: - Downloads and executes additional adware. - Initiates persistent and long-term redirects. - Displays unsolicited advertisements. - Takes over web browser extensions. - Installs unwanted applications. - Displays popup windows. At the end of the day, SafeCleaner is an adware that must be removed from your computer. While it doesn't cause too many problems, the presence of SafeCleaner can greatly diminish the performance of your computer. To start with, SafeCleaner consumes your system's resources in an attempt to hijack your web browser and redirect you to various malicious websites. It can alter the list of browsing histories and open fake websites in the background. However, if you are an average user, you won't have much of a problem with SafeCleaner, since it is a really simple program. In the beginning, SafeCleaner tries to steal your search engine habits, and then it continues with other activities. Once installed, SafeCleaner constantly keeps tracking your browsing activities and looks for opportunities to redirect your browser. The adware is added to your extensions, and it can also substitute the browser's homepage and start page. Before you know it,
