To determine the potential of probe size for diagnosis of ovarian neoplasms by transvaginal ultrasound (US), a prospective study was undertaken. A total of 200 patients with a pelvic mass were examined with a 7.5 MHz linear-array transvaginal US system. Forty patients with histologically proven ovarian tumours, had a 5.0 mm diameter probe used, while the remaining 160 had a 7.5 mm diameter probe. An experienced examiner (A.A.) evaluated each mass on a three point scale to determine the presence or absence of mass, and the degree of cyst-solid and papillary-solid components of the tumour. The proportion of ovarian neoplasms missed or overestimated when the smaller probe was used was quantified and calculated as a percentage of all the neoplasms. In the group with a 5.0 mm diameter probe, there were 17 cases in which a neoplasm could not be detected, 27 cases in which the tumour was overestimated, and 7 cases in which a small neoplasm was incorrectly characterized as solid. This gave a rate of 24% of missed cases. The rate of overestimation

Windows 7 Professional (x86/x64).Q: Deactivated account and account lock I just removed my account from SE, only to realize that I must have been logged in already before to make that decision. When I tried to log in now I'm always redirected to the login page. If I go to the settings and click on Lock Account, it starts redirecting to 'help us identify your login session' page. The id, email address and the password are correct, as they were in my account before. What am I supposed to do, lock my account again or what? A: Go to the login page (i.e. select 'Forgot my password' and enter your email address (you can use the same email address you use to login in the site). Once you get your password, you will need to change it, then you should be able to login and you will regain access. For any further questions, post a new question here. Over the past few months, a number of new and weird baked goods have entered the marketplace. Some are new twists on existing classics, others are just whole new wacky creations. Here are five of the newest and strangest treats to hit the shelves: 1) The taco cake. Just Google "taco cake" and see what pops up. One thing is immediately clear: The taco cake is the most delicious thing we have ever seen in our entire lives. We have actually looked at the packaging. It is an actual cake. A taco cake. Just take a moment and really appreciate that. One bite will make you want to buy a large case and keep it on hand for when guests inevitably show up late to a party. And just in case anyone gets any ideas about making these things, remember the one exception: This cake is officially not for kids. 2) The Froyo sou 3e33713323
