Netflix now has over 60 million subscribers worldwide, and of course it needs them to provide content. The streaming service, which has already made its way to the Android platform, is working on bringing that app to a number of other platforms and now these charts show that it's making progress. Android users who have subscribed to Netflix can now see the on-screen promotions that appear when they're browsing through some of the content that the streaming service offers. The app is already available to Android and iOS users, but it can be enabled or disabled, depending on your preferences. The feature that brings those promos to Android users is now present, but users cannot actually select which ones to see in their notifications. However, as noted, users do get to see which promotions appear on screen when the app is active. The promos show up when they open up the “Home,” “Browse,” “My TV,” “Home & Movies” and “My Account” sections of the app. Of course, you’ll have to be subscribed to Netflix to see these, but the feature has been rolled out to Android users, so you’ll be seeing them all of the time. It’s unclear why Netflix started pushing these promos to Android users; they also appear on

iOS. As noted, they're not actually selectable, so maybe the company just wants to push them to as many users as possible. What do you think about having to see these promos? Is it something you actually use?

Furthermore, the family is the best person to help the patient with the decision whether to continue living with the patient or to withdraw treatment and let the patient die peacefully. The following list is adapted from the guidelines for end of life in the Netherlands in general practice from the last guidelines. In some instances, the original list contains sub-items, which can be looked at by the family together. After the patient has died, the family can make a final plan with the GP in which the family will be empowered in order to make the final decisions. Standard pyrolysis
