The first AutoCAD, Release 1, was published in December 1982 and created entirely by Autodesk. The first design tools were not available in Release 1, but in Release 2 in March 1983. The first customer to buy AutoCAD was the Seattle First National Bank, which used it to prepare plans for its new Seattle branch.[2]

Autodesk released the first commercial, text-based, multi-user CAD program in 1983, Concur. Concur was an interface to AutoCAD. Concur was later bought by a group of users and developers from Autodesk, who continued to develop it. Concur was later re-released with a graphical user interface, as Paint Shop Pro. In the late 1980s, Autodesk released its first true 2D CAD program, A-LEVEL/A-PLUS. This was later renamed AutoCAD. A key feature of AutoCAD is its ability to be used by more than one person at a time, in order to meet the needs of an organization with a workforce that requires more than one person to complete a project. It is the first CAD program which can be used for professional design work. Released in 1990, AutoCAD LT is a subset of AutoCAD. It was designed to be used on workstations without the memory, storage, and CPU speed of a full-featured AutoCAD. The core program, plus all DWG and DXF files, reside on the storage media. In 1992, Autodesk released AutoCAD for Windows. The first release to run on 32-bit Windows, the program was quickly adopted by the industry for the creation of building plans, and sold well in spite of the difficult operating system (Autodesk later introduced WinDXP for Windows XP, which improved the program's performance). In 1998, AutoCAD 2000 for Windows was released. It included many of the new features of AutoCAD LT, and added the ability to import and edit 3D DWG files. In April 2000, Autodesk released AutoCAD R14, a CAD financial markets this week. The company, whose products include the striking Seamaster Marine line, has sold a minority stake in its watch division to London-based pension fund manager Hermes. Omega also has a joint venture with China's Tudou, which makes watches for brands including Tissot and Swatch. The Swiss company said it would use the proceeds from the planned sale to pay down debt. The idea for a sale came from the current president, Paul Bogaerts, who took over at the company in May after the retirement of founder René O. C. Borsig. The sale is expected to be completed by October. Omega's move follows a long string of luxury brands going public in the past year. Tocqueville, HUSQVARNA, Hermes and Yves Saint Laurent are among the other brands flocking to the capital markets this year, alongside household names like Giorgio Armani and Gucci. "The financial markets are in a very good place and this is a unique time of growth and opportunity for the luxury goods sector," said Mr Bogaerts. "The financial markets are responding positively to a beautiful and reliable watch brand in a luxury segment where there is room for growth." The president, who has been at Omega since 2005, declined to disclose the company's share price. Mr Bogaerts said the main target market for the company's watches was sportsmen and outdoorsmen. But Mr Bogaerts also believes the company's products, particularly the Seamaster Marine, will appeal to the luxury consumer as well. He said Omega had already gained a presence in the US market through the joint venture with Tudou and would be rolling out the Tudou brand in the US later this year. "What we have, is a great brand name and a great product," he said. "The watch has such a strong heritage and an active brand identity, it is difficult to improve on it." The Seamaster Marine is among several new models from Omega this year. In addition to the Tudou joint venture, the company also recently started selling the Aquanaut, a a1d647c40b

Q: Word or sentence for "to fall asleep in one's mind"? I wonder if there is a simple and clear way to express the idea of "to fall asleep in one's mind". Something like: To fall asleep in one's mind is to fall asleep while thinking about the external world. It's a conceptually clear way to express the idea but I'm not sure if it is correct. A: "To fall asleep in one's mind" is the traditional phrase you are looking for. Here is the relevant part of the OED, under "fall asleep in", (dated) To fall into a state of unconsciousness; to become unconscious; to lose consciousness.

Q: MediaElement.js - Mute all other audio on the page I've been trying to use the mutes all audio on the page and replace it with the audio I want to play at the same time. I don't have a good grasp on how all this works, so any help is appreciated. I've got it working with only one element, but I can't figure out how to add in some kind of loop so it will work with all elements. This is what I've got so far: `$('body').find('audio').each(function() { $(this).attr('muted', true); $('audio').attr('src', $('audio').attr('src')); var element = $(this); $('body').find('audio').each(function(index) { $(this).attr('src', 'media/' + element.attr('src')); }); });` A: I would use a shared variable: `var audio = $('body').find('audio');`

$('body').find('audio').each(function () {
