Effect of a single dose of a 5-HT(3) receptor antagonist on human evoked motor activity in man. Serotonin (5-HT) is an important neurotransmitter in the control of movement. Pharmacological manipulation of the serotonergic system has been used to elucidate the role of the 5-HT system in motor function. Attempts have also been made to use 5-HT antagonists for the treatment of movement disorders. The aim of this study was to examine the acute effect of a single dose of a 5-HT(3) receptor antagonist on human evoked motor activity and to determine whether this effect is mediated via the localisation of 5-HT(3) receptors at the nerve terminals in the human motor cortex. A single oral dose of RO 60-0175 (a 5-HT(3) receptor antagonist) was given (70, 140 or 210 mg) to eight healthy male volunteers in a double blind, randomised, single-dose, three-period crossover design. The plasma concentration of RO 60-0175 was determined using a validated HPLC method. The study was carried out in the Department of Clinical Pharmacology at the Royal Brisbane Hospital. Subjects arrived at the clinic in the morning after a night's sleep and all studies were carried out in a double blind manner between 0700 and 0900. The evoked motor response following transcranial magnetic stimulation was recorded in the hand and arm muscles. RO 60-0175 was well absorbed following administration and reached a peak concentration within 60 minutes. All doses of RO 60-0175 significantly reduced the amplitude of the motor evoked response. This observation is not consistent with inhibition of 5-HT(3) receptors. To resolve this dilemma, the efficacy of RO 60-0175 may be further studied in different disease states that cause disturbances of the 5-HT system.Q: Multiple values for a function I
