The File > Open command opens a dialogue box for selecting an image file. Navigating to a location in the directory structure allows you to choose an image file from the My Computer window. Alternatively, open the Save for Web and Devices dialog box by selecting File > Save. Then select "Save for Web and Devices" from the menu on the bottom left of the window. If the image doesn't open, this is normally because the image file format is either unsupported or not supported by Photoshop. If the image does open in Photoshop then it may not have been saved in the correct format. Try saving again with higher quality. Photoshop doesn't work for the file type "JPG" (.jpg). Photoshop can display the image. It cannot edit or modify the image. The Save or Save for Web & Devices dialog box allows you to save an image as either a TIFF or Photoshop PSD. The image file type you save determines how that file can be displayed when the image is opened. (A PSD file can only be viewed with Photoshop and a TIFF can only be viewed with Photoshop and other Adobe Creative Suite programs.) Note: Saving your image as a Photoshop PSD allows you to edit it with Photoshop, but editing the image is not recommended for inexperienced users. What file formats can I save an image in? Adobe Photoshop is easy to learn but still a professional tool, costing $9.99 US. Photoshop Elements costs $8.99 US and is a great tool for casual Photoshop users to learn. And the best part is that you can get a license for Elements. If you want to learn more about Photoshop, you might want to check out our Ultimate Photoshop for Designers series. The Burst mode in Adobe Photoshop Elements When you save an image, Elements creates a "dark overlay" layer that contains the black background of your image. This is known as the dark overlay layer. The color and brightness of your image is displayed against the dark overlay. Brightness and color balance is done with the toolbars along the top. Pressing B (for Brightness) reduces the brightness of all colors, and R (for Red) increases only the red color. Pressing S (for Saturation) reduces the saturation of all colors, and L (for Luminance) decreases saturation but increases the brightness. If you have the Magic Wand tool, you can select the dark overlay layer and desaturate or despeckle it, which deletes all brush strokes on it. You can also adjust the size, opacity and threshold with the toolbars. The Other fundamental tools There are lots of tools for changing the white balance, saturation, brightness, contrast and more. To get a good idea of how each one works, take a look at the Quick Tool Bar in the Layer→Adjustment Settings window. This is an example of the Quick Tool Bar, showing White Balance (WB) and Clarity. Right-click to make additional adjustments, and you can press Q (for Quick) to return to the image window. White Balance and Color Balance tools To help you save black and white images, as well as save color photos with desirable hues, you can use the White Balance and Color Balance tools. White Balance and Color Balance tools You can change the white balance, both the brightness and the color balance of an image. You can use the White Balance tool to set the white balance of a photo, and the Color Balance tool to adjust the color balance of a photo. The White Balance tool has four options: Auto – the camera usually does a good job of setting white balance for a scene, but it has no controls, so a681f4349e

Incremental selection is a great tool for precision, because you can be sure you have selected all the pixels you intend. It is also useful for working with images that have different levels of transparency. There are three steps to using the incremental selection tool. First, you need to set up the brush. Use the brush thumbnail in the toolbar. Set the Brush Preset to one of the easy-to-use default settings or Customise Brush Preset. Select the "On Click" Brush Type. Set the Size and Opacity of the brush. You should set the brush type to "Bezier" and the Opacity should be 50%. Click on the black of the canvas (or the layer where you want to paint) and then release the mouse button.
