SimpleAccounting is an Open Source library that manages to handle very simple double-entry bookkeeping. In simple terms, when an operation (for example a purchase) is performed, the application adds to one of the accounts two entries: one that refers to the operation itself, the other that refers to the operation's opposite, namely the removal of goods or money from the account. In order to achieve this result, SimpleAccounting follows the mathematical approach of "Debits and Credits", which is the mechanism adopted in the field of double-entry bookkeeping. SimpleAccounting was developed as a Java library. SimpleAccounting is useful in any type of application that needs a simple double-entry bookkeeping engine. For example, it can be used to handle the management of expenses or to apply a simple accounting model in a web application. The library uses the Java Object System, and represents a very simple (and, therefore, fast) engine that represents the books of any company. So, if, for example, we want to track the expenses made by the company "X", and we need to keep a table that includes all the operations that we make, in order to keep a record of all the expenses that we made in the past, in our case the "History" table will be used: The first thing we need is to know how to enter an operation. The operation that is made by the user is then inputted as a "Purchase", in our example, so we must follow this sequence: In the first row of the table, a "Purchase" must be created, that includes two columns: the Account to which the operation is made to (in our case "Purchases") and the Value of the operation (in our case the amount of money to be paid). The table where the operations will be stored is called "History", so in the first row we will have the following data: The second thing that we need is to be able to add and remove operations from the table "History". To do this, we use the method "add()" of the Table class, which, in our example, would be added as follows: The following shows what the table "History" will look like at the end of the operation. Once all operations have been stored

The parade was first held on March 17, 1920. History The parade started in 1920 as a 4-kilometer march around downtown Los Angeles from USC to City Hall and then up Hill Street to Pasadena City Hall. In 1924, the parade was expanded to a 1-mile parade around downtown, starting and ending at City Hall. In 1961, the march was restricted to a 2-mile route that ran along Hill Street from the Civic Center to the city's international airport in Playa Del Rey. In 1990, the parade was expanded to a 4-mile route, and in 2009 the route was extended to 6 miles. In 2012, the event expanded to an 8-mile route. The parade route currently includes Old Town Pasadena and parts of North Hollywood and Northridge.
