I have been developing AV software since 1993. Then in 1997 I start writing a AV app called "Keyspan" in Borland C++ Builder. In late 2005, I decided to re-program Keyspan and the start a new project. So I started working on the new project and it's called "Keymacro". It was easier to work on the new project because of the rapid development of Windows and development tools. Keymacro uses Visual Basic 2010 to develop. It has a great user interface and has basic registry features. Keymacro is an easy to use and complete AV product that enable the user to create an organized library of active X controls and DLLs. I found other AV products difficult to use. So my intent is to have Keymacro easy to use and complete. Keymacro is an ideal product for using in new projects or for adding to your existing projects.
