If you're having trouble, please accept my apologies for that. If you cannot work with this program, please let me know. If everything goes well, then in the future I will try to describe the installation procedure for each category of users. If you do not have free space on your hard drive, then you can download the Catia distribution from my website. It has a license and distributions of Linux, Windows and Linux. The installation procedure is very simple. In the Windows Setup window, click Apply, then click Next. In the next window that opens after clicking the Download button, select the installation folder. You can select a folder for both Linux and Windows. After that click on OK. After downloading, you will see a list of installed operating systems. For Linux it will be written in English, then for Windows in Russian. Below we can choose Linux or Windows. To select Linux, click on the name of the operating system and click on its icon. To select Windows, click in the same window as Windows and to select Linux, click on the Linux icon. As a result, you will see a window for selecting the operating system. This window will be the first to install Linux or Windows. In this window you can change the names of discs. To do this, simply click on any drive and press Enter. As you remember, I installed Windows 8.1 on a computer with Windows XP, and for Linux, I chose 7.2 with Windows 7.3. To successfully install Windows 7 on Linux, Realtek must be installed. After that, in the installation window you will see a hint that driver installation is required. If you don't know something about drivers, you can use the Documentation section. Next, the installation will begin. Copying the system and installing system files will start. As a rule, copying takes 10-20 minutes. Now the installation process is over. What about a system update?After installation, you need to go to the My Computers section, and then to the Update and Security subsection. Select Install Windows there and click the Install button. The Windows 8 installation will load. Select the Install Windows option. When a window appears to confirm the installation, click on OK. When the installation is complete, you will be prompted to restart your computer
