The actress, known for her roles in the "Jumanji" series and "The Matrix," said that the women are "fake" and "nobody, nothing." "I have learned that hurtful and derogatory language can cause serious emotional and psychological damage," Pinkett Smith said in a statement. "My comments were in bad taste and

I take full responsibility. I sincerely apologize for offending members of the transgender community." Pinkett Smith's comments on Sunday night came in response to a question from host Ricky Gervais on whether or not men who are transgender can be the women who play their mothers on screen. Transgender and gay rights groups accused Pinkett Smith of using the awards show as a platform to attack transgender people, and Pinkett Smith had previously slammed Caitlyn Jenner as "disrespectful" for her appearance at the Golden Globes. "The most brave, strongest and hardest working people of our time – the transgender community – are under attack and we must continue to support them and show up for them," Pinkett Smith said. The Smiths, whose mid-aughts ballad-rock was the sound of a generation, have reunited and announced tour dates for Europe. Billed as the "World Tour For The First Time Since 1989," the run begins in March. To mark the occasion, the band will also be performing the entirety of their seminal 1987 album "The Queen is Dead" in a series of London concerts, dubbed the "The Perfect Music" sessions. The project, which will also incorporate songs from their "Strangeways, Here We Come" and "Viva Hate" albums, will be released on double vinyl by EMI's UK label 2-CD digipak version in April. The performance on April 26 at the O2 Shepherd's Bush Empire, in London, will also be released in DVD format as "The Queen Is Dead The Complete Sessions" on May 11. The band's performance in Nottingham on April 26 will be released on DVD and CD on May 18. In a statement, the band said: "We are playing 'The Queen Is Dead' in its entirety on the tour as it represents the heights and the depths of our love of the music. It's still our favourite album, and we're very excited that we'll be playing it the way we first rehearsed and recorded it all those years ago. This is the only way we can do it – it's our only option, to play the songs with the band, as they were in the studio and to play them for our current audience as they were then." The band has also announced two shows in New York on September 14 and 15. On April 13, the band will perform in Detroit, followed by a show at Grand Rapids, Michigan on April 17, and then a tour of the UK. The setlist for the UK dates will be announced at a later date. The band's reunion show will be filmed for a DVD release by the label of the concert. They have also announced a series of intimate shows in the UK this month, beginning in Leicester on March 4. Details of the tour dates for the UK will be announced at a later date. Citizen Abroad: Why is China Still Investing In Africa?
