The Symantec Security Response Center is monitoring reports of a new hacking method targeting Mac users. Security experts call it a combination of social engineering and targeted attacks. The cybercriminals focus on Web applications, specifically on Web-based email service providers. As part of their campaign, they send e-mails containing a macro attached. The macro records keystrokes on the victim's computer, and then sends the information to a remote server. The goal is to steal e-mails and passwords. "While many users are familiar with the dangers of a social engineering attack, we're seeing a new trend: attackers are now using social engineering tactics combined with targeted attack methods," said Mike Murray, Senior Security Strategist, Security Response, Symantec. "To protect your privacy, you should be careful about what you reveal online, and especially where you allow software to run." Attackers gain access to the victim's Mac computer through a variety of means. For example, when you visit websites that use Flash or Java, the risk is higher. Other possible avenues include clicking on links in social networking applications, downloading free software, and clicking on links in e-mails. Symantec's Security Response Center can help you protect yourself from social engineering attacks. VirusBulletin.com VB100-186 – Symantec Enterprise AV 2009-007 (SX) Symantec Security Response reports that a malicious spam message sent via a URL in an e-mail is being used by hackers to gain access to computers. The message claims that the computer's hard drive may be infected with malware or viruses and contains a link to download a software package. If the user clicks on the link, they will be directed to a Web page that attempts to trick users into installing malicious programs. To protect your privacy, you should be careful about what you reveal online, and especially where you allow software to run. Symantec Security Response is available at Symantec recently added malicious Web sites that harvest passwords and credit card information to its Safe Browsing database. This database serves as an early warning system to alert users when they land on a website with a phishing URL. Malicious Web sites are also added to the company's Secure Web Gateway service for enterprises, which protects their users from many advanced attacks. 1d6a3396d6
