Hypoglycemic activity of ginger extract and mechanism of hepatoprotection in normal and streptozotocin (STZ)-induced diabetic rats. The hypoglycemic activity of ginger extract was evaluated by oral administration in normal and streptozotocin (STZ)-induced diabetic rats. Ginger extract was able to reduce the glucose levels in blood, urine, and gastric juice of normal and STZ-diabetic rats. The hypoglycemic activity of ginger extract was compared with a standard drug metformin. Ginger extract exerted a more efficient antidiabetic activity compared with metformin. At 10 and 25 mg/kg, ginger extract lowered the glucose level in STZ-induced diabetic rats by 20% and 22%, respectively, in a dose-dependent manner. The mechanism of hepatoprotection was demonstrated by the efficacy of ginger extract in reducing the serum activities of alanine and aspartate aminotransferase.[Significance of complete resection of the rectal wall in the treatment of rectal cancer].
