What's New in the?

CDRCue allows you to import audio, data, or CUE-BIN tracks into a text file to create your own CD-R cuesheet. Cue/BIN: ¿¿¿¿ ¿¿ A cue-bin cue file is a very simple text file containing information about the CD-R it was created for. The CUE-BIN format was designed to make it easier for people to transfer CD images to the internet. Cue files are much more powerful than CUE-BINs. If you have your own CD-R, you might have a single set of files you will be burning on many discs. The approach we have taken for CDRCue is to allow you to create different cuesheets with each disc, and then generate one cuefile to store all the disc information in a single directory. The CD-R application (or CUE/BIN utility) then can open and restore this cuefile, which means that it can copy any CD-R to any other CD-R, regardless of which disc it was created on. This means you can store the same cuefiles on several computers and boot your CD-R disc on them all. Cue/BIN works in much the same way as a cue file. It is a very simple text file containing information about a single disc. It is currently supported by CDRWIN, EAC, and Roxio. If you are making a set of discs for one person and you can ensure all of the discs are formatted to the same level of quality, there is no reason to use CUE-BIN. Examples: CUE-BIN: Cue/BIN: CDRCue Description: CDRCue is an application that helps you create audio and data cuesheets for CD-R discs. This application is a completely free Cuesheet Designer that lets you create a cuesheet file for any number of audio or data tracks on any number of CD-R discs. Cuesheets are very flexible and powerful, and they are important to the success of every CD-R disc. When you create a cuesheet, you are creating a statement about how you want the disc to look and how you want it to be ordered, while still leaving room for the CD-R application to decide how best to actually physically produce your disc. The application is meant to be easy to use
