What's New in the CmdLi?

The DOS CommandLine Light (CmdLi) is a complete ToolBox for DOS commands, DOSKEY macros and several DOS command line programs (including GEMs). The 7 character formatting extension (7-ext) has been added. 7-ext allows words longer than 7 characters to be split into several lines within a command, all of which are displayed in a different color. CmdLi has a demonstration mode that includes a few extra features and allows longer input. Programs can be saved into any file. In the demonstration mode, short options are displayed in a table in the program window. CmdLi may start external programs, such as long DOS programs. CmdLi recognizes exclamation points (!) and the input begins with this character. If the first character is a text printable character, this character is ignored. CmdLi stores commands and repeats them. This function allows for extended input. The program window may be hidden. CmdLi may be completely hidden. CmdLi also reads and executes MS-DOS programs. The minimal functionality for this is the Standard Commands for DOS (SQD) program in 7-ext. CmdLi sets the value of the _MACHINE environment variable to 'DOSBox-Win32' if Windows is detected. CmdLi is supplied with an extensive help and help window containing a table with commands. Help may be accessed by pressing F1. This may be a reference to this table for execution. CmdLi is supplied with the subroutines MS-DOS command set. This allows for extended input. CmdLi is supplied with the seven character formatting extension (7-ext) module. 7-ext allows words longer than seven characters to be split into several lines within a command, all of which are displayed in a different color.
