You can learn more about the technology here: Here is a video demonstrating how the technology functions in FIFA 22: Another video showing the technology in action can be found here: Here are the specific gameplay enhancements included in FIFA 22 powered by the new motion capture technology: Controls are more responsive when your opponent is running. We've seen players sprinting away from you to get away from you on the pitch and now we've optimized the control dynamics to react to those sprints. From a distance, you get the same power, precision, and control with the new tools in FIFA 22. When you're heading for a defensive or offensive pass, the ball naturally flies to your feet. One of the most fundamental but often overlooked parts of the game, ball physics have been updated. Take-ons now hit you first, rather than your opponent, when there's no clear path towards goal. If you're receiving the ball on the ground, you now have more protection and better ball control. Ball positioning is improved, and you now receive the ball in a more natural ball-to-foot position. When teammates receive the ball on the ground, they now retain possession more effectively. The ball will be on the ground, moving, looking for a teammate when you're standing still. Players close to your feet will be more proactive in their approach, when you're facing goal. If an opponent blocks a pass, you can now initiate dribbling from an intercept. Dribbling can now be initiated from any position on the pitch, even off-the-ball. You'll be more comfortable on the ball in tight spaces. The timing of your run-up and delivery on through balls has been improved. Scrappy 2v1 tackles will now be more useful and rewarding to play. Tackles will be more responsive to your body orientation. You'll be able to control your opponent more readily when tackling. Your quick changes of direction are now more responsive. Ball control has been enhanced through improved positioning and body awareness,
