I had no idea what this library was when I picked it up at my library, but I like the syntax, and I've really liked coding with it. The only problem I have with it is that I cannot figure out how to output error messages. I have tried a few ways, but my output only shows in the application's window, not in my console. print("test") print("test2") return error_dialog(t) Also, when I run "tkinker", the output is just a blank screen, with a white box where the console should be. I should also mention that this is my first time working with this library. Thanks in advance! A: You can use Tk.withdraw() to hide the window or Tk.destroy() to hide the window and close the application. Here is an example. Mainwindow import tkinter as tk class MainWindow: def __init__(self): self.root = tk.Tk()
