Description:Free live cams and sex chat. Video chat live with amateur cam models and pornstars from around the world.A comprehensive study on the mechanisms of hydrogen production from non-noble metal metals in an electrochemical reactor was performed in the Petroleum Research Institute in Washington. The goal was to better understand metal-air batteries which have been considered for hydrogen production from air using air cathodes. At first, the cathodes were prepared by coating a mercury-containing polymer onto a conductive disk. A non-noble metal electrode was then placed onto the cathode and a metal was electropolished to expose active metal. Mercury losses caused by this process were partially recovered using electrochemical cleaning and the resulting products were tested for hydrogen production. To accelerate this technology, new polymers were designed with enhanced mercury-recovery mechanisms.Q: Display a number in a pattern different from the decimal format Hello everyone I am new to C# and I am stuck when I am trying to display a number in a pattern different from the decimal format. I am using the following code to display a number in a pattern like the following $0.00 Here is what I have done so far decimal num; string text; double deci; if(deci == 0) { text = string.Format("$0.00", num); } else { text = string.Format("${0:0.00}", deci); } However it doesn't display $0.00 I just get the $ sign on the top left corner any help would be greatly appreciated! A: That syntax for formatting is for formatting a double, but num is a decimal. Use this instead: decimal num; string text; decimal deci; if(deci == 0) { text = string.Format("$0.00", num); } else { text = string.Format("${0:0.00}", deci); } However that is a terrible way to display any value. There is a much better way, like this: string text = string.Format("{0:0.00}", num, deci); A man suspected of being the one responsible for a criminal attack outside
