VoIPerized automatically · does the needed port forwarding (WinXP & UPnP router required). My account was compromised using a password from an unsecure email account. I had 5 port forwarded to my home address and my work address for years. I never had any port forwarded to my home address due to the far higher latency compared to the work address. I changed all my passwords and eventually got my account and port forwarding back. I still have a bit of paranoia about all accounts as the email account was compromised. I wonder if it would be worth it to create a non-port forwarded account and start using that one again. It will most likely be harder to change it back to an unsecured address. It depends on how much time you have to get port forwarded back. If you're not connecting more than once a day, then yeah, go ahead and change it. The main thing is that you can, in fact, change it back. You just have to do it correctly, or you're going to end up with a port forwarded that's not working. I still have an account on Shoutcast that is from a few years ago. I get about 5 minutes latency but I keep the bitrate high. I have no problems. The fact that I have a username and password for that account makes it
