This application relates generally to the production of titanium-containing compositions and the like, and more particularly to the production of amorphous solid solutions of titanium in aluminum, aluminum alloys, and other beryllium-containing metals. The invention is particularly concerned with the production of amorphous titanium containing solid solutions in aluminum and aluminum alloys, for use as substrates in the electroplating of coatings which provide corrosion protection against sea water, and at the same time improve the adhesion of the coating to the substrate. Various titanium containing compositions are useful as substrates for various coatings. In particular, titanium containing substrates are suitable for use in the electroplating of such coatings as chromium for corrosion protection and anticorrosion adhesion. While it is known that titanium in aluminum and titanium alloys, e.g., Ti-6Al, may be electroplated to form adherent and corrosion protective coatings, the plated product is generally brittle and exhibits poor adhesion. Typically, such platings exhibit poor mechanical properties, especially in high stress areas. In certain instances, however, it is desirable to electroplate a second coating which will improve the adhesion of the electroplated layer. Such a coating is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,519,802 to Cagle and U.S. Pat. No. 4,578,157 to Cagle et al, which disclose coating titanium with a cobalt-chromium-molybdenum alloy to provide the desired properties. The '802 and '157 patents, in addition, describe a process for producing titanium alloys by first impregnating various metals into molten titanium, and then consolidating the impregnated molten titanium in a vacuum or inert gas atmosphere at a pressure of about 10^{sup.}-6 to 10^{sup.}-8 Torr or less. Inert gases such as argon are particularly useful because the pressures used in the process leave pores in the Ti-containing articles, and because these pores effectively fill with other metals while the other metals are solidified. An advantage of the '802 and '157 processes is that a relatively high purity titanium starting material may be used, and the starting material is not charged with excess aluminum or other metal which would complicate the removal of the aluminum or other metal from the final product. Unfortunately, prior art processes for the production of titanium-containing products are relatively expensive, complex, and time-consuming. A need exists, therefore,

Perhaps not when you look at the animal kingdom, but so far, the Extinction Rebellion has had a pretty good time causing chaos in the U.K. and beyond. It has halted traffic on London streets, shut down bridges, prompted mayhem on the train network, and even sparked meetings. While the number of people who have booked in excess of $1,500 to attend the movement's popular climate change conferences is declining, the true believers have mostly managed to cover themselves in glory. In the country that always leads the world in terms of carbon emissions, the protests and demonstrations have seen more than 100 arrests, more than 30 people hospitalized, and two people died. As if that wasn't enough mayhem, the Extinction Rebellion has now decided to attempt to shut down Heathrow Airport, one of the world's largest, to make a statement about human-induced climate change. The group says in a livestream last night that the demonstration will start in Central London at 5 a.m., outside Parliament, and "move to Heathrow and surround the terminal. Our hands are open." As of 11:15 p.m., Heathrow was surrounded by nonviolent protesters. According to London's Evening Standard, Transport for London has advised people traveling to the airport on Saturday to board their flights as normal, and warned that anyone planning to disrupt traffic will be arrested. The newspaper also reports that the airport is preparing for riots. Heathrow Airport is the latest location for the Extinction Rebellion demonstrations, after shutting down Parliament Square on Friday and creating a "camp," called "thou shall not enter the square" on Saturday. According to the organization, "This camp will support people from all backgrounds to refuse to comply with the will of the powerful by occupying public space." On Friday, the group also had a protest at Waterloo Bridge. However, Extinction Rebellion also wants to cause "disruption" in London's financial district and on the London Underground. In a statement on Thursday, the group said that if people supported its goals, "this could disrupt the everyday business and commerce of a major metropolis and cause billions in economic loss in what is a global city which relies heavily on its international investment." Extinction Rebellion protests in the U.S. have not been quite as disruptive, but still caused some chaos, as protesters blocked roads and bridges in Portland, Oregon, and New York. 'Ext
