At least 13 people, including two professors and two professors of mathematics, were injured in the clashes that broke out between the students and police. The violence began around 9 pm when students started tearing posters plastered on the campus walls and other landmarks, including the Canteen, the hostel, the library and the office of the vice chancellor. Security guards and policemen allegedly opened fire on the protesting students, injuring two, before the police retook the campus. The riots, which took place in the evening, are being compared to the Modi wave, where the BJP captured an overwhelming majority of seats in the recent assembly elections in five states and also swept the Delhi assembly polls held last year. The trigger for the campus unrest was an event organised in the campus by the ABVP, the campus affiliate of the BJP's student wing RSS. A Congress leader from the JNU has termed the violence a reaction to the police firing on students at the
