It is endemic to Ecuador and known from the Serranía de Podocarpus-Arauca Cordillera, San Rafael Canton, and Southeastern Andes Cordillera of the easternmost Andes in the western

Amazon lowlands. The specific name honours Marcos Franco, a Costa Rican herpetologist, in recognition of his "friendship" with members of the Ecuadorian herpetological community. Common name Franco's robber frog has been coined for this species. Description Males measure and females in snout-vent length. The dorsum is light brown with indistinct darker brown or black dorsolateral markings. The venter is pale yellow to orange, and there is a darker, mottled marking, either interrupted or continuous on the throat. The fingers and toes have light yellow coloration. The dorsum is slightly granular. Habitat and conservation

This species occurs in humid lowland rainforests at elevations of above sea level. During the day, it can be found at relatively open sites in primary and secondary rainforest and associated gallery forest; and at night, it is found on 1cdb3666d
