The Electronic Frontier Foundation (EFF) is leading a class action settlement lawsuit against the United States government over warrantless access to our communications. This case has been covered in the press from across the political spectrum and in ways that have been interpreted as "support" or "opposition." One page of the agreement should debunk all of these misconceptions at once. If the EFF is representing you, you have no reason to sign the agreement. The 52,000 documents in the agreement reveal that a warrantless surveillance program, the effort which masquerades as the foreign intelligence investigation, was authorized by the secretive FISA Court -- a court that the American public has no access to. It is a sensational find from the National Security Archives. The release contained hundreds of documents that detail the analysis of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court (FISC) judge who in 2007 authorized the extensive warrantless surveillance of hundreds of individuals who used the Tor network. What Is FISA? U.S. government has invested enormous amounts of time, energy, and money to "defend" an "indiscriminate" program to secretly collect records of U.S. telephone calls, and that it's "government lawyers" have
