Description What is a Container? What is a Container? Â· The 'Container' is a storage service that can manage your data. Container How Is A Container? Containers are used in cloud computing to provide more scale and to provide a more elastic cloud environment, and to give application isolation. Â· A container is a virtualization technology for managing operating system (OS) software. An application's isolation from the underlying OS and other applications is achieved by running it in a virtualized environment. A container is a runtime environment that holds an application together. Container Building Blocks A Container Building Blocks? Containers are used to store, and manage the instance of an OS. Containers are stateless. An OS instance is a complete application system that includes an operating system, and all the software that runs on it. A container is like a virtual machine or a sandbox. Containers isolate the application from the underlying OS. Containers Are Sized? Containers are generally sized with respect to memory, storage, and network bandwidth, and they may also be sized according to the system running them. A container is a unit that holds a single user-space. It is much smaller than a virtual machine that contains a complete operating system. Features What Are Some Container Features? Some of the features of containers include that they can be run at scale, that they are stateless and secure, and that they can be created, deleted, paused, and resumed. Container Features Containers are designed to be stateless, and they are a flexible way to run and manage containers. Applications can be installed, uninstalled, paused, resumed, and restarted with a simple "docker run" command. Containers
