Changing climate is considered to be the most important global environmental problem. One of the five key elements of climate change is its effect on freshwater resources, especially water quality. In Thailand, climate change is evident in the increase in temperature and heavy rainfall, and subsequent alterations to the hydrological cycle. This article reviews the available literature about the effect of climate change on freshwater ecosystems in Thailand, focusing on the change in the quantity, quality, and distribution of water resources. Data analysis indicated that increased temperatures cause more evaporative losses and more severe flooding, which could substantially alter the distribution of freshwater resources. Moreover, anthropogenic activities that result in eutrophication or microalgal bloom in rivers could threaten human health. Therefore, efforts to understand the effects of climate change on freshwater resources in Thailand are warranted. The present invention relates generally to vacuum processing systems, and more particularly to improving throughput of wafers through a vacuum processing system through improved transfer of wafers among a plurality of individual load lock chambers within the vacuum processing system. In the fabrication of semiconductor devices, it is frequently necessary to subject a workpiece, such as a semiconductor wafer, to a vacuum processing operation, such as a physical vapor deposition process, in order to deposit material on the surface of the workpiece, or to etch material from the surface of the workpiece. In general, a conventional vacuum processing system is an enclosure which houses a cassette which in turn holds a large number of workpieces. The workpieces are typically supported in carriers on a cassette holder. The cassette holder is provided with a plurality of vacuum apertures through which a vacuum can be applied within the cassette. In some cases, a wafer carrier is used to support wafers during transfer to and from the cassette holder. In either case, a vacuum transport arm is typically provided on the outside of the cassette holder and is

(While a person can become lactose intolerant, even get lactose poisoning, by drinking milk it's not something that can be prevented. Not surprisingly, developmentally-stunted children, of which there are a few, almost always develop lactose intolerance early in life, which probably goes hand-in-hand with stunted growth.) The one thing that did surprise me, however, was the huge percentage of the population that's gluten intolerant: First, it's encouraging to see that the World Health Organization's International Agency for Research on Cancer has published guidelines recommending against the consumption of gluten: There is sufficient evidence in humans for the carcinogenicity of some foods, foods or food constituents such as meat [19,20], fish [21,22] and possibly fruit juice, alcoholic beverages (and carcinogens per se may be consumed in combinations) [23]. Such associations have been documented between the intake of gluten-containing foods and cancers of the intestine, stomach, breast, prostate, kidney, thyroid and skin, and of other tissues (Table 3). The observed associations are generally, but not always, consistent in direction and in magnitude, and are influenced by the characteristics of the exposures under study. Second, it's interesting to note that: - The prevalence of celiac disease, a form of gluten intolerance, is about 0.5-1% of the population, and affects more children than adults- Celiac disease is a genetic condition, and appears to be recessive, or is more prevalent in
