The program helped them learn more about how they would build a talent management strategy and ensure that their organization could adapt and thrive as needed. His insights are a good jumping off point to help your organization create adaptive work, and management, and you could use them right now. Adapting to disruptive change Understand how your organization will be disrupted over the next few years. "The thing I've learned in the last couple of years is that we're going to be disrupted," said Pugh. "In our age of innovation, the basics are changing. How that changes the makeup of our business is going to change how we manage talent." Pugh encouraged the executives to think about what their organization does differently from other organizations today. "Even in some of the best organizations, what they're doing could be disrupted," said Pugh. "I don't think a lot of them realize that." He added that he sees the rise of AI, robotics, a network economy, and other
