You can make a copy or more likely, simply use the link in your browser to load a page in Photoshop. There are some differences in the Photoshop interface between the desktop version and the web version; here is a preview of the interface: The first thing you may notice is that the image windows are not exactly the same size as a desktop view. The web version has larger, 1920 × 1080 pixel windows. The desktop version uses 1,048,576 × 6,556 pixels. Let's say that you want to open the image _portfolio.jpg_ in the web version. Follow these steps: 1. Open your web browser to the URL for your portfolio, so you may open the current portrait view (Figure 2.4) or landscape (Figure 2.5). 2. Right-click (Control-click) on the image and select Open, or double-click the image to open it in Photoshop (Figure 2.7). When the image is loaded, the document window is active and you can make changes to it. You can still do most of the edits we discussed previously using the buttons in the Toolbar and the menu on the right. 4. If you want to save the new image, click on the button to do so (Figure 2.7). Make sure to save as a JPEG and that you clear the option for a new file each time you save. Figure 2.5 : Select the Landscape tab to get this view (which is the only landscape view available) Figure 2.6 : Locate the image on the network or local computer, then open it in Photoshop Figure 2.7 : Save the edited image with each new version. It will save as a JPEG image format Figure 2.8 : These instructions work the same as the previous options, except here the page
