In iOS, I can do: UITextField.keyboardAppearance =.dark UITextField.keyboardType =.numberPad to set the keyboard appearance and keyboard type, which will make the keyboard play a native "speak" or "complete" action when a soft-keyboard would, as a native keyboard. How can I do this in Android? I can do: View.keyboard_hint = "@string/keyboard_hint" which adds a text hint, however this doesn't play a native sound, as it plays only if a user taps the hint. The only way to do what I want is to add a key listener which is in my way, so that I have to listen for each of the different kinds of key presses, which I'd rather not do. Is there a better solution? A: You can play sounds on Android using AudioManager: fun playSound(soundName: String): Boolean { if (!context.packageManager. hasSystemFeature(PackageManager.FEATURE_BLUETOOTH)) { b7e8fdf5c8
