The flux of blue-light radiation affects the development of sunburn, which has been defined as heat sensations beyond redness; however, the wavelengths involved have not been characterized. The purpose of this study was to determine the wavelengths of blue light contributing to sunburn development in human skin. On two occasions, skin microvascular perfusion of volunteers was measured at 1-minute intervals, using laser Doppler flowmetry (LDF), while they were exposed to approximately 8-million-lux white light, followed by a 40-second challenge with white light of equal intensities (1-
