Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for controlling a backup power supply in a motor vehicle. 2. Description of the Related Art Portable devices, such as cell phones, digital cameras, and portable radios, are often used in motor vehicles. These devices can be used while driving, which can potentially have a safety-related aspect. That is, if these devices are exposed to high voltages, a dangerous situation could develop in the vehicle. For example, a cell phone exposed to a power supply of a vehicle could trigger a high voltage discharge that, when conducted to the body of the vehicle, could result in serious bodily harm. Consequently, it is critical that portable devices be prevented from contacting high voltage in a vehicle. Another concern with portable devices is the potential for errant discharge of stored electricity. For example, use of a portable device that is receiving power by means of a connection to a vehicle's power supply could lead to errant discharge of energy. Accordingly, the prevention of errant discharge would be advantageous. A known approach for protecting against high voltage in a vehicle is to have a ground path between the vehicle's power supply and the vehicle's body. To accomplish this, a conduit or wire with a suitable insulation is provided between the power supply and the vehicle body. Some vehicles, however, do not have a ground path between the power supply and the vehicle's body. Additionally, in some vehicles there is no provision for direct attachment of a wire between the power supply and the vehicle's body. For example, a typical vehicle is not intended to have a wire or conduit connecting the power supply and the vehicle body. Certain vehicles, such as aircraft, automobiles, and ships, have power buses, but these buses typically have no exposed metal. Therefore, they cannot be used to form a ground path between the power supply and the vehicle body. Another approach would be to use a low voltage power supply with a secondary power bus. The power bus is connected to the body. A low voltage power supply is used to provide power to a device through the secondary power bus. The potential risk of high voltage in the power bus is less than the potential risk of high voltage in the body of the vehicle. However, this approach has d0c515b9f4

OBJECTIVES: To evaluate the effects of hyperbaric oxygen (HBO) treatment on brain blood flow in contused and concussion head injuries in mature rats. METHODS: Wistar rats were divided into three groups: control (0.9% NaCl), contusion + HBO (1.1 atmospheric air pressure [ATA] in 90% oxygen), and contusion + HBO (1.1 ATA in 90% oxygen). The right hemisphere was contused at a pressure of 2.4 ATA for 100 ms, and the contusion was created using the same apparatus after the same pressure for 100 ms. Right-frontal cortex blood flow was measured by the radioactive microsphere technique before injury and at 24 h after injury. RESULTS: The right-frontal cortex blood flow of the contusion + HBO group was significantly increased compared with the other groups at 24 h after the injury (p
