"For this new release, FIFA is working with 22 high-quality motion capture suits to track a football match with the purpose of capturing the essence of every player and every pass, with every object on the pitch and in the air," said Sean O'Driscoll, FIFA's vice president of soccer. "Powered by HyperMotion technology, FIFA 22 is the most authentic soccer simulation yet. We're bringing you the feeling of being on the pitch with a new sense of player control, player reactions and player movement." "The most realistic soccer simulation is the result of combining technologies developed by FIFA and partner organizations, including the NFL, NHL and NBA," said Sabrina Gasperini, Game Producer at Electronic Arts Tiburon. "And we look forward to developing more partnerships with eSports organizations as the popularity of eSports continues to grow." HyperMotion Technology in FIFA 22 "It's not easy to recreate the player's movements across the width and breadth of a pitch," said Electronic Arts Tiburon game producer, Sabrina Gasperini. "It's also not easy to capture that movement in real time. To make that possible, we're using the full player data from a high-quality motion capture suit. By building a motion library from a complete football match, it allows us to reproduce the player's movements and movements in the air based on all of the details on the pitch. The impact it has on gameplay is immense." The end result for FIFA 22 is an experience in authentic "real-life football" without sacrificing the fun for players or providing them with AI tactics that don't reflect real-life football situations. Influenced by the popularity of eSports and EA SPORTS FIFA titles, FIFA combines the elements of competitive gameplay with a highly sophisticated, real-time, physics engine and motion capture to deliver authentic football simulations. The innovative motion capture technology developed by EA SPORTS delivers a true-to-life player likeness, fluid animations and reactions and accurate player controls. The FIFA series is the world's leading sports franchise and one of the most played video games in history with more than 400 million registered players and countless hours of gameplay. FIFA and eSports Today, eSports is a thriving and growing competitive arena. In fact, the eSports community was responsible for doubling worldwide revenues for the eSports market

Q: asp:Login Control.. where to use it and how to check if logged in? Here is my scenario. I have ASP.NET Web Application, with a few asp:Login Controls on certain pages. If the user is logged in, the Home page for the application displays properly. When the user is not logged in, the home page displays a login prompt.
